Everyone wants to play faster, but rushing tempo is the slowest way to get there. A metronome turns speed-building into a simple, measurable routine.

Start where it's clean

Find the fastest tempo at which you can play the passage perfectly five times. That is your starting point.

Small steps

Add 2 to 5 BPM at a time, once it feels comfortable. Automatic speed trainers do this for you.

Burst practice

Play one beat or one bar above your top speed, online metronome then rest. It teaches the motion before metronome endurance catches up.

Stay relaxed

If your shoulders or forearms tighten, you are going too fast. Slow down a little and climb again.

Consistent daily practice beats one long weekly session.
