Glass Reflections Dent Repair is a one-man mobile dent removal business run by Alex. The dent repair sacramento shop name comes from the way he reads a dent, by watching how reflections run across the paint. If you found the name on a map or on a card and want the basics first, this is the short version.

The work in one paragraph

The service is paintless dent repair, usually shortened to PDR. Alex gets behind the panel with steel rods, or glues small tabs to the outside and pulls, and moves the metal back a little at a time. The factory paint is left alone, which is the whole point of the method.

Where the business is based

The base is 5816 Roseville Rd in Sacramento, CA 95842. Most of the work happens wherever the car already is, because Alex drives out to it. You do not need to bring the car to the base to get a repair.

What gets fixed

- Small round dings along a door edge or body line
- Creases that have not stretched the metal too far
- Hail pocks spread across several panels
- Dents on a bumper cover or a tailgate skin
- Panels on newer cars where the metal is aluminum

A typical door ding lands somewhere in the 30 to 120 minute range. A panel full of hail dents is a longer day than a single ding.

Where PDR runs out

If the paint is broken at the dent, PDR will not close it, and that dent belongs with a body shop. Metal that has been stretched thin or folded hard stays visible no matter how careful the repair is. Alex would rather tell you that from a photo than drive out and find it on site. Dent removal is the whole menu, with no paint work attached.

From photo to price

You text a paintless dent repair sacramento photo of the dent to (916) 585-2554. The reflection in the photo tells him a lot about how deep the metal has gone. The price is agreed before the drive over, so there is nothing to negotiate in your driveway.

Hours and how to reach him

The business works Monday through Saturday from 10am to 9pm, and it rests on Sunday. The same number takes calls and texts, though a text with a photo gets you further.

Where to see his work

Since 2014 his repairs have gone up on Instagram at @alex_glassreflections. Scrolling through the before-and-after videos gives you a fair idea of what a finished panel looks like. There is also a Google listing, which sits at 5.0 stars.

Why a mobile service

Most people with a ding do not want to hand over their car for a day just to fix one panel. With a mobile tech, the car stays where it is and the repair fits around your schedule. He brings rods, lights, glue tabs and a reflection board, and the rest happens at the curb.

Comparing PDR with a body shop

The usual body shop route covers the dent with new paint, and the original finish is gone on that spot. If the paint is sound, pushing the metal back is a gentler route, and nothing gets added to the panel. A clean, unbroken finish around the dent is what makes this method possible.

The kind of car owners who reach out

Most messages are about a door ding from a parking lot or a dent from a shopping cart. Owners of EVs and aluminum bodies write in too, since those panels behave differently from steel. None of these needs an appointment to ask, since a photo in a text is all it takes to start.

What Alex will tell you straight

A refusal from the photo costs you nothing, and it spares you a wasted visit. He sets the expectation first, so the finished panel matches what you were told. That habit is the main reason to ask a PDR tech before you ask a body shop.

Send a photo by text to (916) 585-2554 and Glass Reflections Dent Repair will tell you honestly whether PDR suits the dent.
