Who Can Be Held Responsible for an 18-Wheeler Crash?

A crash involving a tractor-trailer often has truckaccidentlawyer.wiki more than one responsible party. The driver, the trucking company, the trailer owner, the shipper that loaded the freight and the maker of a failed part may all play a role. Sorting out legal responsibility is one of the first tasks for a tractor-trailer crash lawyer, because each party may carry its own insurance.

Claims against the driver

The starting point is usually the driver's conduct, such as speeding, following too closely, unsafe lane changes, distraction, impairment or fatigue. Commercial drivers need a commercial driver's license (CDL) under 49 CFR Part 383 and must follow the driving rules in 49 CFR Part 392, including restrictions on texting and hand-held phone use. A safety violation does not prove fault by itself, but in many states it can serve as evidence of negligence, and some states treat it as negligence per se. A truck accident attorney will compare the driver's conduct with these rules.

The trucking company

If the driver is an employee working within the scope of the job, the trucking company is generally answerable for the driver's negligence under vicarious liability, sometimes called respondeat superior. The company may also face direct claims based on its own conduct, including negligent hiring, negligent retention, negligent supervision and negligent entrustment. Under the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations, a trucking company must keep a driver qualification file under 49 CFR Part 391, run drug and alcohol testing under 49 CFR Part 382, and inspect, repair and maintain its trucks under 49 CFR Part 396. Gaps in those records can support a direct claim against the company, and for a truck accident lawyer the driver qualification file is often one of the first documents requested.

Leased trucks and owner-operators

Some drivers are owner-operators who lease their trucks to a trucking company. The leasing rules in 49 CFR Part 376 require the lease to give the trucking company exclusive possession, control and use of the equipment for the lease term, which can matter if the company says the driver was an independent contractor. The USDOT number and name marked on the cab, the bill of lading and the lease itself help show which company was operating the truck. An 18-wheeler accident attorney will usually request these documents early.

Cargo loaders and freight brokers

Cargo that shifts or falls can contribute to rollovers and jackknife crashes. The cargo securement rules in 49 CFR Part 393 set requirements for tiedowns and securing loads, and a shipper or loading company that controlled how the freight was loaded may share responsibility in some cases. A freight broker that arranged the load raises separate questions, including federal preemption, and the answer turns on the specific claim and facts.

Manufacturers and repair shops

If brakes, tires, steering parts or an underride guard fail because of a defect, the manufacturer may face a product liability claim. A maintenance contractor that performed faulty repairs can also be named. Telling a defect apart from poor maintenance usually requires inspecting the parts before they are repaired or scrapped.

Insurance and shared fault

Under 49 CFR Part 387, for-hire interstate trucks with a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 pounds or more that haul nonhazardous property must carry at least $750,000 in public liability coverage, and certain hazardous materials require higher minimums. Most states apply comparative negligence, which may reduce damages by the injured person's percentage of fault, while a few still apply contributory negligence. A truck accident lawyer looks at all of the parties, since a single policy may not cover the full loss.
