

To send flowers for Eid from abroad, order through a florist near the recipient and arrange delivery for a date that suits them. Choose a bouquet with their tastes in mind, then add a personal note so your gift feels close even across the distance.

Plan the date and delivery

Eid dates follow the Islamic lunar calendar, and the exact day may depend on local moon sighting. Check the expected date where your recipient lives, rather than relying only on the date in your own country. Eid al Fitr and Eid al Adha are separate celebrations, so make sure you are planning for the one your family or friends observe.

People may spend Eid visiting relatives, attending prayers or welcoming guests. If you are unsure when they will be home, ask them or someone close to them. Delivery on the day before Eid can be a practical choice and gives them time to enjoy the flowers during the celebrations.

Order ahead when you can, especially if the recipient lives in a busy area or a remote location. A local florist can tell you which delivery dates are available and may be able to accommodate a preferred time, though an exact time is not always guaranteed.

Choose flowers that feel personal

There is no single flower required for Eid. Start with colors and flowers the recipient already likes. A light arrangement of roses and seasonal greenery can suit a calm room, while a brighter mix may feel right for someone who loves color.

Think about the household too. A compact arrangement is easier to place on a crowded table, and flowers in a vase can be convenient if guests are arriving. If anyone in the home is sensitive to fragrance, ask for a lightly scented selection.

If the household has pets, tell the florist. Some flowers are toxic to animals, including lilies, which are especially dangerous to cats. Ask for an arrangement suited to the home and advise the recipient to keep flowers out of reach.

Place the order and add your note

Look for a florist that delivers to the recipient's area. Before paying, check the delivery address, contact number, local time zone and any instructions for entering the building. It helps to know what will happen if no one is home.

Seasonal flowers can vary from the picture shown online. If a particular color or flower matters to you, mention it and ask the florist to contact you before making a substitution.

A few sincere words are enough for the card. You might write:

- Eid Mubarak. Thinking of you and sending love from afar.
- Wishing you a peaceful Eid. I hope these flowers bring a little color to your day.
- With love to everyone at home. I wish I could celebrate with you.

Questions about sending Eid flowers

Can I send flowers before Eid?

Yes. Sending them a day early can make delivery easier and lets the recipient display them for the celebration.

Should I tell the recipient about the delivery?

You can keep it a surprise, but a brief message may help if they are often away from home. Another family member may be able to help with timing.

What if I do not know which flowers they like?

Ask someone close to them or choose a simple seasonal arrangement. A personal note can make even an understated bouquet feel thoughtful.
