Who Is Liable in a Semi-Truck Crash?

Unlike many car crashes, a semi-truck crash often involves several potentially responsible parties. The driver, the trucking company, the owner of the trailer, the company that loaded the cargo and the manufacturer of a defective part can each play a role. Identifying every responsible party is an early job for a truck accident lawyer, because each responsible party may have separate insurance.

The driver's conduct

The starting point is usually the driver's conduct, such as speeding, following too closely, unsafe lane changes, distraction, impairment or fatigue. Commercial drivers must hold a commercial driver's license (CDL) under 49 CFR Part 383 and follow the driving rules in 49 CFR Part 392, including restrictions on texting and hand-held phone use. A safety violation does not prove fault by itself, but in many states it can serve as evidence of negligence, and some states treat it as negligence per se. A truck accident attorney will compare the driver's conduct with these rules.

The trucking company

When the driver is an employee acting within the scope of employment, the trucking company is usually responsible for the driver's negligence under vicarious liability, also known as respondeat superior. The company can also face direct claims for its own conduct, such as negligent hiring, negligent retention, negligent supervision and negligent entrustment. The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations require a driver qualification file under 49 CFR Part 391, drug and alcohol testing under 49 CFR Part 382, and systematic inspection, repair and maintenance under 49 CFR Part 396. Missing or incomplete records can support a direct claim against the company, and for a truck accident lawyer the driver qualification file is often one of the first documents requested.

Owner-operators and leased trucks

Many owner-operators lease their trucks to a trucking company. The leasing rules in 49 CFR Part 376 require the lease atlanta truck accident lawyer to give the trucking company exclusive possession, control and use of the equipment for the lease term, which can matter when the company argues the driver was an independent contractor. The USDOT number and name marked on the cab, the bill of lading and the lease itself help show which company was operating the truck. A truck accident attorney will usually request these documents early.

Cargo loaders and freight brokers

Cargo that shifts or falls can contribute to rollovers and jackknife crashes. The cargo securement rules in 49 CFR Part 393 set requirements for tiedowns and securing loads, and in some cases a shipper or loading company that controlled the loading may share responsibility. Claims against a freight broker that arranged the shipment raise separate questions, including federal preemption, and the answer depends on the claim and the facts.

Manufacturers and repair shops

When brakes, tires, steering components or an underride guard fail because of a defect, the manufacturer can face a product liability claim. An outside repair shop that did faulty work may also be named. Telling a defect apart from poor maintenance usually requires inspecting the parts before they are repaired or scrapped.

How fault and insurance fit together

Under 49 CFR Part 387, for-hire interstate trucks with a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 pounds or more that haul nonhazardous property must carry at least $750,000 in public liability coverage, and atlantatruckaccidentlawyers.wiki certain hazardous materials require higher minimums. Most states apply comparative negligence, which may reduce damages by the injured person's percentage of fault, while a few still follow contributory negligence. A truck accident lawyer looks at every party because one policy may not cover the full loss. This is general information rather than legal advice, and it does not predict the result of any claim.
