

Financial and Privacy Costs Regular black-market purchases drain allowances and create transaction trails to unknown accounts that complicate bank disputes. Sharing addresses and school or workplace details increases targeting for repeat sales. Reviewing monthly statements with family, blocking seller accounts and tightening social privacy settings reduce ongoing pressure and financial leakage. What To Do After Paying a Seller Stop further transfers immediately, even if promised a refund on one more payment. Export chats, note payment references, dates and account handles, and inform your bank. In Singapore, report illegal vape sale to authorities through official channels such as HSA and police reporting routes, keeping acknowledgement numbers. Avoid recovery agents who demand upfront fees; they are often a second fraud layer. Supporting Family and Friends If someone you know searches for vapes, respond with concern rather than punishment. Share legal and health facts, agree on household rules for unknown links and payments, and offer to attend a counselling session together. Praise steps toward quitting and keep follow-up check-ins brief and consistent. Professional guidance helps when cravings or peer pressure persist. Delivery Offers Are Extra Risky Posts promising discreet delivery often require advance transfers to personal wallets, sharing home addresses and phone numbers with unknown handlers. This exposes buyers to scams, identity misuse and legal exposure during handover. Meeting strangers for prohibited goods adds personal safety risk. Decline briefly, step away and tell a trusted adult or counsellor if pressure continues. One puff can start cravings. What if I already paid a seller? Stop payments, save chats and payment references, inform your bank and report officially. Avoid paid recovery agents. Are flavours safer? No. Flavour names do not indicate lower nicotine or cleaner vapour; tests have found mismatches and contaminants in illicit products. Additional Note: Quit Help in Singapore National quit programmes, polyclinics, school counsellors and workplace wellness advisers offer free or subsidised counselling, behavioural plans and, where appropriate, approved cessation aids. Setting a quit date, informing family, removing triggers and tracking cravings improve success. If slips occur, counsellors adjust plans without judgment. Early contact works better than waiting for dependence to deepen. For file 026, connect this to your notes and keep lawful choices in view.
